

No Confidentiality Agreement

As an applicant and potential competitor for Aggie PITCH, you are responsible to protect any information concerning your startup that you share with advisors, team members, fellow participants of the competition and the attending audience. The McFerrin Center for Entrepreneurship takes no responsibility for unwanted disclosure in any of these instances.

All applicants and finalists should be careful about disclosing information concerning proprietary concepts. Competitors concerned about the protection of intellectual property may research intellectual property protection online or at Texas A&M University System or other libraries.

Neither Texas A&M University nor the McFerrin Center for Entrepreneurship takes any ownership in an idea or plan solely through application or participation in the Aggie PITCH competition. Likewise, neither Texas A&M University nor the McFerrin Center for Entrepreneurship ensures any confidentiality or nondisclosure conditions for any information submitted or presented in the Aggie PITCH competition. As with most business plan competitions, you are responsible for protecting your own proprietary information throughout the Aggie PITCH competition.
